Since the temperature coefficient of iron seems to vary greatly with the amount of carbon present, it Avas deemed necessary to determine the temperature coefficient. This was done by making an open coil of a suitable length of the wire, providing it with heavy copper lead-wires, and placing the whole in an oil bath which was gradually heated up to 160 F. and then allowed to cool slowly, the resistance of the wire being noted at 5 degree intervals as the bath cooled. The variation in resistance with the temperature, computed from the curves actually obtained, is given in the following table and is shown graphically iu the accompanying curve: The resistance-temperature curve of the iron wire used in the temperature coils having been determined, the resistance of the temperature coil for every 10 degrees throughout the desired range can bo found from the curve. The temperature instrument can then be calibrated by balancing the instrument against the resistances corresponding to these temperatures. The usual range of temperature for each instrument is 100 degrees on the Fahrenheit scale, which may be selected from any part of the absolute temperature scale up to temperatures which would destroy the temperature coil. This can be accomplished by adjusting either the resistance of the comparison coil or the temperature coils. The former method is preferable, since the temperature coils can then be used in connection with any...
