Not illustrated. 1906 edition. Excerpt: . CHAPTER V THE POET Within and Without The poetry of George Mac Donald is the man at his best, as far as he can be known. His poetry is singularly self-revealing, deeply spiritual and loftily religious. He sometimes touches profound abysses of the soul, and sometimes he reaches up to highest peaks of intuitional experience. He gives us visions of the innermost. He sees nature and man to their heart, and both are illuminated with intense passion. His poetry might be called the poetry of the Spirit, or the romance of the Soul. Man and nature being alike garments of the Divine Spirit, expressions of the Divine thought, light and all creation can only be the spoken word of God in visible form. The incarnation or doctrine of the lies at the heart of all Mac Donald's teaching, both in poetry and...
