The interpretation of the facts will depend upon whether the glacial deposits upon the north and south sides of the Ohio River belong to the same period or to different periods widely separated in time. The question also involves that as to whether the deposits upon the south side of the river were made before or after the Ohio had worn its present valley. Upon the supposition that the long, narrow trough of the Ohio River (described on p. 57) was preglacial, the glacial deposits Upon the south side at Cincinnati imply an ice dam between five and six hundred feet in height. Soon after the first announcement of these facts Prof. I. C. White published a paper upon the terraces of the Monongahela River, which seemed to him in a remarkable degree to confirm the theory of an ice dam at Cincinnati.<sup>2</sup> To judge of the value of these individual facts it is necessary to take a more comprehensive view of the whole matter than has heretofore been possible, and to speak somewhat in detail of the terraces throughout the whole valley of the Ohio and its tributaries.
