MEMORIA TECHNICA--In modern times may he mentioned, Gray1 and Fci-nagle. MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. --The adjective menial comes to us from the Latin mens, or from the Greek ptovf, or these may be referred to the German meinen, to mean, to mark. If the adjective menial be regarded as coming from the Latin metis, then mental philosophy will be the philosophy of the human mind, and will correspond with psychology. If the adjective mental be regarded as coming from the German meinen, to mean or to mark, then the phrase mental philosophy may be restricted to the philosophy of the mind in its intellectual energies, or those faculties by which it marks or knows, as distinguished from those faculties by which it feeU or wills. It would appear that it is often used in this restricted signification to denote the philosophy of the intellect, or of the intellectual powers, as contradistinguished from the active powers, exclusive of the phenomena of the sensitivity and the will. MERIT (meritum, from fitpof, a, part or portion of labour or reward), means good desert; having done something worthy of praise or reward. Fear not the anger...
