Edgard Blucher, São Paulo. Tapa Blanda. Book Condition: New. 24x17. Este livro apresenta a cidade de Foz do Iguaçu, no Estado do Paraná, e sua experiência com o processo de transformações entre os anos 1964 e 1992. Os governos militares buscaram inserir esta área ao território nacional, e exercer absoluto controle sobre a chamada tríplice fronteira (Brasil, Paraguai e Argentina), impondo uma série de projetos de modernidade, como a construção da Usina Hidrelétrica de Itaipu, a abertura e fomento do comércio de fronteira com o Paraguai e o apoio ao desenvolvimento do turismo. Tais projetos causaram impactos no município: na área urbana que foi remodelada segundo perspectivas técnicas e atraiu milhares de pessoas que buscavam emprego e melhor qualidade de vida. A obra mostra a desordem instaurada na cidade, sobretudo a emergência da população pobre, que ocupou os espaços centrais da cidade, adotando inúmeras estratégias para conseguir sobreviver, e se apresentava como "classe perigosa" para as camadas dominantes. 439 Páginas. 570 gr. Libro.
