The low-pressure steam chest then gets reduced-pressure steam direct from the boiler through port C and reducing valve L. Except when working simple, the valves work automatically. The lubricator to the low-pressure cylinder enters port A and thus insures constant lubrication to the intercepting and reducing valves. Owing to the small area of port C and the contracted exhaust through valve H, the engines develop less power as a simple engine than as a compound at a speed at over eight or ten miles per hour, and thus the runner is compelled to work compound. Should either side break down, the emergency valve can be opened and the engine brought in on one side like an ordinary simple engine. The equal division of the power of the locomotive between the two cylinders at varying speed and loads are effected by giving the low-pressure valve amounts of lead and lap differing from those of the high-pressure valve. Thus each cylinder has a point of cut-off differing from that of the other for the same position of the links, the latter being of the usual type. The intercepting valve is automatic, responds positively to variations of pressure and allows the engine to start without jerking, regardless of reverse lever or crank or positions. The engine is also convertible into the single-expansion type whenever the engineer may deem this necessary...
